THE MISADVENTURES OF THE HON. HERCULES BROWNE, C.M.G.

The East plays many tricks with the men whose days are passed in its thin, tranaparent atmosphere ad its blinding sunglare, but it tampers with nothing so vitally as with their sense of proportion. This of course, has nothing at all to do with the climate-a scape-goat which is made to carry not only the burden of its own sins, but those which belong to the whiskybottle-since it arises solely from the circumstances in which the exiled European is placed. To be a big manin a small community is very bad for the character; to be a hig official in the East is simply destruction. It is well enough so long as the big official remains on his own proper dung-hill, where he may crow unopposed by rival roos-tors, but sooner or later thengo limit of his service is reached, and the supersunuated civil servant is forced to retire to the wilds of West Kensington, or to some similar corner of the land which, though he calls it 'Home,' and boasts that he has served it loyally, has never so much as heard his name or that of the cranny of the Empire in which he has been for so long a shining light of surpassing brilliancy. The sudden change from eternal sunshine to haze sud fog of an almost equal permanency is only typical of the other greater change in the estate of the man who is its victim. From being the Hon, So-and-so Snucks, Member of the Conneil, Head of Such and such besides, he becomes suddenly plain Mr robbed in a moment of those salutations in the market-place which ho has learned to regard as his just tribute. When he opens his mouth for the purpose of enunciating some of those dogmatic opinions for which he is famous, he is shocked to find that his show words are not listened to with the respect, the bated breath, to which his former experiences have accustomed him. Quite 'junior' men argue with him fearlessly; others either ignore his Views, or contradict suffers from a sense of unmerited injury, outrage and ingratitude. In fact he has fallen from the Seats of the Mighty, and the jar is a very nasty one, which sometimes sends him soured and discontented I have viewed these tragi-comedies with a great deal of sympathy and compassion, for I have been privileged to witness the Comprising:—

> I loyally retrieved the Hon. Heroules 579 and his scattered property, put him and them into a cab, and drove off hurriedly amid the cheering of a crowd of street loafers. The temper of the Hon. Hercules was as ruffled as his person, and I felt that it was more than my life was worth to question bim as to his recent adventures, but I took him to his house, somewhere on the other side of Earl's Court railway station, and handed him over to his wife. While doing so I was able to disabuse my mind of its first me that, whatever else he might be, the great man was perfectly seber. My curiosity, however, was piqued, and I later set on foot an enquiry as to the events of the . ight, with the result that I succeeded in eliciting the following distressing facts. The Hon. Hercules, who a few weeks earlier had retired from the service of the Asiatic colony in which it had been my privilege to enjoy his condescending acquaintance, had been invited to dine at the Omnigatherum by a friend. On arrival at 590 the Club he had been informed that his friend had not yet put in an appearance, and he was shown into a waiting-room, in which he fumed and ramped for a matter THE Undersigned have received instruct of half-an-hour. A feeling of incompre-L tions from A. Schonemanis, Esq., honsible neglect had been present in his mind pretty constantly ever since his land-ing in England, and the fact that his friend had now kept him waiting for his dinner without excuse or explanation added to his sense of injury. At last his dignity could bear the insult put upon it no longer. He had been invited to dine at the Omnigatherum, and at the Omnigatherum he would dine. He rose from the armchair into which he had thrown himself, and with that magnificence of deportment which had always characterised his movements, stalked up the big staircase, and seated himself at a table in the diningroom. The waiters looked at him curiously, but he had passed the hall porter, and his presence was no offair of theirs. His air of self-confiderce and assurance did the rest. He ate his dinner in state, paid for it under his own name without protest, and then betook himself to the smoking-room for the enjoyment of his coffee and In all this he had no sense of irregularity, of being guilty of an impropriety. On the contrary, he was to othoroughly imbued with the idea of his own claims to consideration, too convinced that whatever the Hon. Hercules saw fix to do must for that very ten on by sight, that he never so much as thought of questioning the fitness of that which he are doing. If anyone had whitehere to bit. The suspicion that the numbers of the Camigathermi would not be pleased if thy learned the use which he was making a their seared and evelugive marriso, to would have twested the notion with scorn. For more years than he cared to count he had walked unquestioned into all the resorts to which his fullows and access, warmed by the pleasing consciousness that he was thereby conforring rather them receiving a favour. For him English life was a thing hopelessly out of focus. The imposing figure of the Hon, Hercules Browne, C.M.G., had for long bulked so big on his mental horizon that he could not of a sudden necommodate the a world in which plain Hercules bimself to a world in which plain Hercules Browne, no more to be aignified with the title of 'Honograble,' was an unconsidered atom, and in which the letters after his action, the Hon. Heroules reared himself out of his arra-shair, and began to roam at large through the Club. He did not wish to reture home yet awhile, for he shrunk from reverling to his wife the painful fact that he had suffered from the intolerable insult conveyed by his friend's failure to keep his appointment. In the near past men had tumbled over one another to 245 do him resonence, to run at his bidding, to come at his bank, and had vied with one another for the honour of entertaining him as their guest. Never until this evening had the horror of his fall been written so plainly for him; but he would conceal the fact from the wife in whose eyes be was still to be counted among the great ones of the earth. Meditating these things in a sullen and deed demon sperit, the Hon. Hereales wandered through the great, warm, brilliantly-habited and thickly-carpated corridors until change but him into the cardroom of the Chib. Bere he seated hims if in a vacant emit near one of the tables. and watched that men playing a game of bridge. He was himself a heen lover of the game, to be presently became engosed in observing the play and the fortunes of the strangers near him. His chair placed him an a level somowhat beaccident enabled him to detect the fact that the player nearest to him was dealing in's very peculiar manner. The cards which he gave to his appenents were slipp. sed from the top of the peck in the ordinary way, but those to himself and his partner. came now and again ust from the top but from the bottom of the deck. The How. Hercules could hardly believe his eyes. He stared in blank astonishment. He could just see the battom card of the pack by sinking a little lower into cushious of his chair. It was the acc of nearts. A had vanished! That was at once enough and too much for the Hon, Hercules, He rest up, portentous, dignified, awful, with that Day of Jadgment laws upon his face which had so often brought terror to the hearts of recalcitment juniors. His duty was plajo. A man of his standing and position, he felt, was bound to put a stop to such ill-doing as this when enacted onder his very nose.

"Ard you a member of this Club " asked the chorus. "There not that become, and Browne, with protentous solemnity. 'I came here to dine with a gentleman of my acquaintance-- Mr Fisches."

One of the sown called a waiter and whisneved sounding to him. He departed hurristly, an awkward silence followed, during which Browne stood measily in the centre of the hostile group, which showl ingly ignored his presence.

Here is my card, he said at length, fundling in his valstcoat pocket, and tendering the pasteboard to the gravest looking of the four strangers. The man refused the proferred gift, and turned his back on the Hon. Horagles with the utmost insolence.

Browne's breath was completely taken away by this fresh outrige, and before he could find words in which to frame a suitable protest the waiter reappeared, followed by the hall-porter who had admitted the Hon. Hercules earlier in the eveniue, and a crowd of furtively grinning footmen. 'Has Mr Fischer been in the Club this avoning?" asked the man who had declined

'I am Mr Hercules Browne . . . I'm a a Companion of the Most Distinguished Order . . . Be damned to you,' interrupted the youngest young gentleman, airily. We are going to invest you with the Most Distinguished Order of the Boot. Here, you fellows, out with him! And at the word, at a sign from the man who had acted as apokesman to the party, the waiters rushed No. 31 Des Voux at the Hon. Hercules, seized him violently in spite of his outery and his strugules, shot him down the stairs in a sories of ungainly and wholly involuntary bounds, wiped the hall with him, and finally dumped him down upon the dripping pavement without the building. But the thing which hurts the Hon. Hercules more than all this is the fact that his friend Fischer, who has had some trouble with the Club committee, far from offering an apology or expressing regret for the aironts to which his guest was exposed, has written to say that he Browne, had only himself to blame, and that he, Fischer, bas

OFFICIAL APPOINTMENT

Assistant Director of Public Works.

We learn that Mr P. N. H. Jones, Civil Engineer, has been appointed Assistant Director of Public Works for Hongkong. Mr Jones's name does not appear in the Colonial Office List; and we understand that he has not hitherto been in the regular service of the Colonial authorities. He is at present employed in Trinidad, where extensive harbour inprovements, waterworks, and sewage operations are in course of construction under the advice of Mr Osbert Chadwick, one of the Consulting Engineers of the Colonial Office. It is understood that the new Assistant Director of Public Works is the nomines of Mr Chadwick, who, it will be remembered by older residents, was responsible for the Hon. F. A. Cooper's first appointment to Hongkong. In view of his experience in Trinidad and the work new in progress in Hongkong, Mr Jones's appointment seems to be eminently satisfactory, and it is to be trusted, with this The Earl of Hardwicke (Under-Secretary | addition to the staff of the Public Works for War) in the House of Lords said that Department, the public improvements con-Lord Roberts received Lt.-Colonel Kinloch | templated or in progress in this Colony. after sentence (in the 'ragging' case) was | will now be pushed on towards completion. promulgated, and assured him there was no | Since the Hos. LONDON LETTER.

(I'rom' Our Own Correspondent.) London, February 6.

For many months, Bridge has held on irrejistible sway among the 'upper ten, but signs are not lacking that its fascination is on the wane, and there wall to few to regret the fact. It is often lost sight of that Bridge is a game of will and not chance, and habitual players are bound to win when pitted against novices. One of the very worst evils for which it is answerable is the steady grabling which it has introduced among Society women, and it is wel knews that many a person has been raised by the people to whose house they have been invited in friendship. THE BROUGHS' FAREWELL PERFORMANCE.

Last night, at the Theatre Royal, the Brough Company terminated their present season in Hongkong, when they gave (by special request) another performance of that ever-enjoyable comedy Are you a Mason ?' The crowded house and appreciative audience dispelled at once any doubts as to the popularity of the piece. From start to finish, the little worries and troubles of the two brother Masons were watched with lively interest, and at times it was really difficult to know whether one was crying or laughing, so hearty and continuous was the laughter and applause. Of the other members of the company, nothing more need be said than that they, one and all, acted up to their reputation. On the curtain being rung down for the last time, hearty cheers were raised for Mr and Mrs Brough. This was repeated again and again, and cries of 'Speech, speech was heard from various parts of the theatre. Nothing would satisfy the audience until Mr Brough a epped forward, and, on behalf of Mrs Brough and himself, and also of his company, he thanked those present for their support that night, despite the inclemency of the weather, and also the received during the present season. Mr PANY. Brough, in the course of his speech, referred to the present condition of the theatre. THE BROUGHS' FAREWELL PERFORMANCE.

Last night, at the Theatre Royal, the Brough Company terminated their present season in Hongkong, when they gave (by special request) another performance of that ever-enjoyable comedy 'Are you Mason?' The crowded house and appreciative audience dispelled at once any doubts as to the popularity of the piece. From start to finish, the little worries and troubles of the two brother Masons were watched with lively interest, and at times it was really difficult to know whether one was crying or laughing, so hearty and continuous was the laughter and applause. Of the other members of the company, nothing more need be said than that they, one and all, acted up to their reputation. they have been invited in friendship. On the curtain being rung down for the last time, hearty cheers were raised for Mr and the game has developed into scandalous Mrs Brough. This was repeated again and again, and cries of 'Speech, speech,' was heard from various parts of the theatre. Nothing would satisfy the audience until Mr Brough a epped forward, and, on behalf of Mrs Brough and himself, and also hesitated to condemn their congregation of his company, he thanked those present for their unbridled indulgence, but at for their support that night, despite the last it seems that this craze is, if not to inclemency of the weather, and also the appreciation and support the company had received during the present season. Mr Brough, in the course of his speech, referred to the present condition of the theatre.

He himself thought that necessary alterations, both in front and behind the scapes. were needed; but he might tell them that he had iton the authority of a local enthusiastic gentleman that these alterations were only a mere-question of time. He hoped so, front, and add a little to the comfort of those behind the scenes. He was unable it present to say anything about future arrangements. That was left in aboyance until they reached home, but he had no doubt but that they should exchange greet ings once more over the footlights of the Hongkong Theatre. Mr Brough once more thanked them for the appreciation and support extended to Mrs Grough, binself, and his company. With those parting words, the curtain was run down.
